The Rival Nightingales.

A writer on birds, Edmund Selous, describes a song contest between two male nightingales. "Jealousy," he says, "did not seem to blind them on the merit of each other's performance. Though often one, upon hearing the sweet, hostile strains would burst forth instantly itself—and here there was no certain mark of appreciation—yet sometimes, perhaps quite as often, it would put its head on one side and listen with exactly the appearance of a musical connoisseur, weighing, testing and appraising each note as it issued from the rival bill. A curious, half suppressed expression would steal over its face, and the idea appeared to be, 'How exquisite would be those strains were they not sung by —, and yet I must admit that they are exquisite.'"

The Early Use of Petroleum. From a diary kept by one of the surveyors it appears that the first use of petroleum as a remedy in this country occurred in the neighborhood of the head waters of the Allegheny, in the western part of New York, about the beginning of the nineteenth century. As the oil flowed from a spring it accumulated on the surface of shallow pools, and its medicinal properties were first recognized by the Indians in that section of the country. This oil, which was then known as "Seneca oil," was collected and dried in the sun, and in addition to its medicinal use it was also employed for mixing the war paint for the tribe.
